

How's business?

If you answer:

I'm so involved in the daily operations that I haven't time to look at the business at a big picture level.

Nobody can do things as well as I can – I make all the decisions, so I tend to get bogged down.

I've no time to spend looking for long-term solutions to the business's problems, so I end up fighting fires most of the time.

I can't get quality people who care enough about the business like I do.

I've no time or money to invest in change.

I pay everyone else including the Government its taxes, but there's nothing left for me.

Nobody knows my business as well as me, so who is there that can possibly help?

Business is a tough game as it has always been – things will get better soon!

Then it is time we talked.

If your business isn't going the way you want it to, then it's time to think about what can be done to improve things. You can't solve all of your problems in one go, but if you can identify the key problem areas, you can fix them by working to a clearly defined plan.

However, the first step is to do something different. It's all so easy to put it aside, leave it for a while, simply wait, hope for a turn around in the economy, hold off until sales pick up etc, etc, but the reality is that you don't have to wait for any of these things to happen; you can begin making improvements whenever you want.

You have to be motivated to make the change or accept the consequences of doing nothing.
